Summary

Didi Kyoung-ae Han is Associate Professor at the Centre for Multicultural Collaborative Learning, Saitama University, and a human geographer working across Korean, Japanese, and English. Her research on urban commons, precarity, care, and finance in East Asian cities combines long-term ethnography in Tokyo and Seoul with genealogical archival work, and draws on urban political ecology, commons studies, and feminist theory. She has translated works by Sabu Kohso, David Graeber, and others between Korean, Japanese, and English.
